

BOC CRITIQUE

I would like to start at the very beginning of the [REDACTED] course and make some significant comment about each major portion of the course. There will be; however, some areas left untouched, unfortunately, due to time and other things this is unavoidable. I begin to write this critique with a little more reluctance perhaps than other members of the class. I constantly find myself in this unique position and I am not always sure how to react; should I react as I think I am expected, or as I really wish?

At the class reception I naturally felt a little uncomfortable, as I am sure did anyone who was at [REDACTED] for the first time and had absolutely no idea what to expect. At the end of the reception I had the feeling that no one knew anything about my background or what I was like as a person. And I might add that throughout the course no one seemed to try to find out what I was like. I must admit that I am not necessarily an outgoing person, but the onus should be on the staff.

At the very outset I must compliment Messrs [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] for their excellent instruction in photography. Not having any knowledge of the subject I found that portion of the course very interesting and beneficial.

The handgun familiarization was also beneficial and useful, however, there should be time allocated within the schedule for practice and qualification. The Friday afternoons set aside I found unsatisfactory.

As far as the individual excersises are concerned, gentlemen, I really have no complaint. I can't see that anything should be eliminated from the course. Some of the lectures were boring to the class, but I found them interesting; i.e. there was very little that I already knew.

I was quite surprised that all of the staff should wait until the last day and hit me with the sort of conversation that should have been going on from the beginning of the course. At a later time I will sit down and write a much more complete critique; however at this time I will say that I found the experience at [REDACTED] very interesting and I am sure I have learned a great deal.
